THE AMERICAN BOYS

Are Winning High Praise at Henley for Their Manly Manners.

GENTLEMEN AND SPORTSMEN

THE YALE CREW GREAT FAVORITES ON THE THAMES.
THEY HAVE DISCARDED
THE ENGLISH OARS
AND WILL RELY UPON AMERICAN
OARS FOR SUCCESS.

(Special Dispatch to the Transcript.)
HENLEY ON THAMES, July 1.—The near approach of the days set apart for the royal Henley regatta, July 6, 7, 8 and 9, is increasing the already great interest manifested in the gallant young Americans, who are going to uphold the glorious traditions of Yale.

From the first moment of their appearance here up to the present time they have steadily improved in form and have just as surely and deservedly won the approbation of the press and of the public. On all sides the New Haven oarsmen are classed as thorough gentlemen and sportsmen of the first water.

The withdrawal of the Eaton school boys having been gracefully brought about there will be no necessity for rowing a trial heat for the grand race on July 6, and first contest for that trophy will therefore occur on the day following.

A change for the better in many respects was made in the Yale boat today. The English oars have been tried and found not adapted to the Yale crew. As a result they have been discarded and American oars will carry the sons of old Eli either to victory or defeat. In any case the sturdy youngsters from Yale can be confidently reckoned upon to give a good account of themselves.

Inspector Rodrick in an interview today said "I have just returned from where the rescuers are at work and am satisfied with the progress they are making. There is a bare possibility that the men are alive but that is all."

Her attending physicians have said for the past two days that there was little or no hope of her recovery.

THE AFTERNOON SESSION

Of the Berkshire Baptist Meeting at Forest Park Tuesday.

The Berkshire Baptist association after their interesting morning session at Forest Park Tuesday and reported in Tuesday evening's TRANSCRIPT, enjoyed a pleasant basket dinner and picnic fun for two hours and then settled down to business again in the pavilion. The afternoon exercises opened with song service. Rev. J. H. Bigger, the association's president, was on hand in the afternoon and occupied the chair. Rev. James D. Groul's address on "The Period Under Twenty," was very interesting as also was C. W. Donnell's on "The Responsibility of Parents Toward the Sunday School." Rev. F. D. Brown of North Adams was programmed to lead a discussion but on account of the illness of his children, Mr. Brown was unable to attend. Deacon Daniel Upton of this town and E. S. Wilkinson of North Adams offered prayer that the little ones may recover. Rev. Mr. Chapel of Pittsfield was not on the program but delivered an address that was full of thought. Rev. Charles E. Rosecrans of Stamford spoke well upon "Who Are Exempt from Sunday School Works?" Further discussion was led by Harry E. Weeks of Pittsfield. "Echoes from the Eighteenth International Sunday School Convention" was dwelt upon by George M. Darby of North Adams and other members of the association. Then came business, but nothing of account was done. During the afternoon there were several entertaining musical numbers.

NINETY-SIX'S RECEPTION.

A Most Successful Event at Armory Hall Tuesday Evening.

The class of ninety-six gave a reception to their friends and the alumni of the school Tuesday evening and fully 400 persons attended. The orchestra platform was nicely trimmed with potted flowers and palms. Over the entrance, at the left was a slender arch wound with red and white, the class colors. On the other side was a booth decorated with red and white, at which lemonade was served to the guests.

Palmer orchestra rendered a pleasing concert after which the grand march was formed by Prompter Duffy of Pittsfield, President Harris M. Richmond and his cousin, Miss Hall of Pittsfield, led the march. When it was finished an order of twenty dances was carried out.

Maggie Ferguson Has a Bad Fall.

Twelve-year-old Maggie Ferguson, daughter of James Ferguson, Zylonite postmaster, had a bad fall Tuesday evening and escaped fatal injury by the merest chance. She was leaning over the railing of the piazza on the second story of the building in which Mr. Ferguson's store and residence, when she lost her balance and fell to the ground, fifteen feet below. She struck on her side and was unconscious, probably from fright, before she struck the ground. Her father, who saw her fall, picked her up and carried her upstairs. Dr. W. W. Hurd was called and found that the child was badly bruised and was injured more or less internally. Her hip was injured also. The child will recover.

LOCAL NEWS.

FINALLY SETTLED.

The Famous Hen Case Ended With the Aid of a Thief.

Judge Thayer has settled the case of the three hens which were confined at the police station awaiting identification. Chief Kendall made a report this morning that the winged prisoners had been stolen from their roost in the cellar at the police station and no evidence could be obtained in the case. The judge then ordered the case against the hens filed away.

The hens were missed from the cellar a week ago, but nothing was said about the theft as the officers were inclined to be embarrassed.

ITALIAN BAND TROUBLES.

The Band is Dissolved But Will Probably be Reorganized.

The Columbian band, composed of Italians, has been dissolved owing to dissensions in the ranks. The band was organized two years ago and the improvement in the playing had been very noticeable of late.

Several members have been dissatisfied for some time with the methods of conducting the band and as a result D'Glesio, the leader, resigned. What will be the outcome of the dissolution is not known, but those interested in the welfare of the band state that the grumbling element being out, the band will be reorganized under the same leadership.

THE NEW WOMAN.

girls moving with weary, plodding steps, and middle-aged women, gaunt and bent, with stiffened muscles and jaded looks, I did not desire that men's work should be transferred to women in my own country; and indeed, I thought it would be better for French women and French people if the French people if public opinion, and if need be, the law of France, should interpose, as the law of America and England does for minors, and prohibit labor that operates to the injury of the race. It was not unhealthy labor (that is, it was not labor which caused sickness of premature death), it was not compulsory labor (that is, the women were free to take it or reject it, as they pleased), and yet it was unseemly labor. For a man it was honorable labor; for a woman, degrading.

If women are to do men's work, sooner or later they will have to take the bitter with the sweet, the hard with the easy; the fewer men there are to support women, the more women there will be to compete with men; and the transference of women's support from men to women, if carried beyond an exceptional extent, must tend to the degradation and degeneration of the sex. When women enter into competition with men in the labor market, they will knock off the coarser portion of male humanity what little chivalry there is in it; and when women assert that they are in all things the equals of men and can take care of themselves, the worst part of the competing class will tell them that they must take care of themselves in more senses than one. Chivalry is an elevated gratuity which is due, if due at all, from the strong to the weak. The women cannot say, "I am as strong as man, as independent, as free to do what I please," and then ask for his chivalry. And the closer women's wages approximate to men's, the smaller will be the supporting power of men, and the greater the number of women who must renounce wifehood and motherhood, and fight their own weary battle alone in the hardening, competitive turmoil of the struggling world.

The battle of the New Woman is waged nominally against the tyrant man; and if he is one of a distinct class, caring for nobody but himself, well it may be waged. No one need defend him as an isolated individual, having no ultimate responsibility. If women, as a distinct class, have a right to fight men as a distinct class, men have a right to fight back; and when it comes to a fight between men and women, men will be abundantly able to take care of themselves. But behind men are the persons for whom men always fight more desperately than for themselves—their wives and little ones. The fundamental, abiding trouble with this civic warfare is that it is not what it pretends to be—warfare waged against the exclusive usurpation of men. The real, though unintended object of attack is the subsistence of men's wives and children.

It may be laid down as a law of our American civilization that every normal man who thinks himself able to support a wife and family in what he deems his proper station married. It is an instinct of manhood to care for, protect, and support a woman and her children, though it may be, and generally must be, at no little self-sacrifice. Every farmer marries; every foreman, superintendent, and well-paid mechanic marries. The poor and provident workman does not marry—partly because he is ashamed to ask a girl to marry him and earn her own living, partly because he knows that he cannot earn bread enough to go round. In higher life it is the same thing. Undoubtedly, there are thousands of young men of the wealthy classes who could marry and live comfortably, but do not. Their reason is that they cannot support this girl or that girl or some other girl of their set in the style or station in which she has been accustomed to live. We may think the reason a poor one, an erroneous one, but nevertheless it is their reason. The law remains, notwithstanding the exceptions to it, that a normal man thinks that he can support a wife and family in what he deems a proper way, he marries.

Here the New Woman comes upon the stage and tells the farmer's daughter not to become a farmer's wife. She speaks also to all of our American girls who think themselves possessed of superior talents and ambition, and counsels them not to imprison themselves in the prison-cell which the rest of us call home; not to be the housekeeper and nurse and drudge and slave of man, but to be lecturers, professors, poets, politicians, and ultimately members of Congress,—to be, in a word, anything but a wife and a mother. To maintain her doctrine, the New Woman, as she logically must, depreciates, and in some instances, coarsely and flagrantly derides, wifehood and motherhood. Unconsciously, she also counsels women to prosecute an industrial war against men which will take the bread out of the mouths of numberless wives and mothers, and compel them to close their doors and toll in the industrial field of men's work like the French peasant woman.

Indeed, it sometimes seems as if the question which we men shall soon have to face will be whether we will fight for the New Woman and her rights or for the subsistence of our own wives and daughters. In reading the records of great men, we continually—almost invariably—meet the sentence, "His mother was a remarkable woman." It is getting to be a general belief in this day that a remarkable woman should be anything but a wife and a mother. The chief and lasting evil of this New Woman movement is, that it is, directly and indirectly, consciously and unconsciously, inimical to marriage, stigmatizing it as the last resort of the unfortunate, robbing it of its dignity and of its old contentment, and taking the brightest and ablest of our American girls out of the ranks of wifehood and motherhood, and hastening the degeneration of our American race.

President Hopkins believed that the family, and not the individual, "is the unit of society." That "this character of it should be, and unconsciously is, one of the most cherished objects of Christian civilization," and that "unhappy will be the nation whose legislative mind shall regard society simply as a mass of individuals, and not as a combination of families."

The very existence of society, indeed, depends on men and women as entering into a special relation which not only unites their interests, as in a partnership, but identifies them, and makes each sex
